CHANNEL NEWSASIA

- Channel NewsAsia reports that Singapore has ramped up their environmental actions for the year in this year's Year of Climate Action. These include funding for research on how to extract value from waste to galvanize the region to participate.
- Senior Minister of State for the Environment and Water Resources, Dr Amy Khor, said that these efforts will go towards meeting the 2030 United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (UN SDGs).
- Dr Khor was speaking at the annual Eco Action Day Industry Roundtable where business leaders and academics discuss the need for sustainable industrialization and infrastructure development.
- Issues raised included designing products to be easily recyclable and having all industries to implement the circular economy concept to reduce waste.
